A: If diskinternals partition recovery 2.9 serial number rating 6.4 of based. On 325 user reviews added to our site: 04: votes for good: 35:Å . It means that 35 votes were given to this answer. If we look at the FAQ, we can see that given a question with more than 10 votes, if the average score is greater than 10, the question is automatically deleted. I think this makes sense, but we could have some exception for questions which are based on a product (or service) which is not used very often. If diskinternals partition recovery 2.9 serial number rating 6.4 of based. On 325 user reviews added to our site: 04: votes for good: 35:Å . It means that 35 votes were given to this answer, but the average of the 35 votes was 10, so the question was deleted. The votes can be removed by a moderator, though (and we might have another site which deletes posts which are too old, or too old-looking, etc). The mods can also perform other actions on deleted questions, such as locking them, editing them, etc. In this particular case, I think this is because it is not allowed to post the same answer more than 5 times on a single question. Q: how to avoid calling the complete code in tkinter I have created a login form using tkinter in my gui. After the user inputs the details it should verify if the credentials provided are correct. If the user inputs the details successfully it should proceed to the display part where the image will be shown accordingly. now my code for creating the login window is like this: from tkinter import * from tkinter import tk from tkinter import messagebox root = Tk() root.title("Login") def login_window(): global login_label global login_id global login_password global login_username global login_entry global entry_id global password global password_entry login_label = tk.Label(root, text = "Please enter your username and password.") login_label.pack(anchor = 'w') 3e33713323
