Is there any property in formview control in xpages which will be used for validation of the string. A: There are two ways to perform validation in your code, depending on your scenario. If you want to perform validation on the client side of the xPage, you need to do it either using client side JavaScript or using custom function in your code behind. If you need to validate on server side, you can either do the validation in the onSubmit() method in your backing bean, you can also perform validation in the server side validate method as described in more detail in this question. If you just want to check if a certain character is in a string or not, you can either use String.contains() method, or you can use a regular expression validator. So this is kind of a puzzle (I am aware you can't really solve it, that's why I'm giving it a name) You're in a huge house and some doors are closed except one, and it's locked. Suddenly the whole house is in motion but you are trapped in a small part of it. After a while, the door opens and it's an old man who invites you to a party. He has a bunch of different people with him at his party. Then he says "Who wishes to join me in the party?" and you say "Ehm, you mean you want me to stay here, or come to the party?" and he says "Both!" Can you go to the party? Hint 1: You can't teleport on your own, there is some other mechanism for that. Hint 2: If you can answer this, you know that you can go to the party. Now this should be quick! A: As Erik Morse suggested, it's an escape room puzzle Hint 1: If you teleported by yourself and you were in the room, the room would be empty. That doesn't really make sense.
