Among the many hasty statements one can make about this bill, one of the most unjust things to say is that the debate about whether or not to pass this bill should be divorced from the larger issue of whether our society treats the LGBT community fairly. But when one says that this is true, one is engaging in a highly questionable moral judgment. If one will say that the religious freedom bill is bad because it is bad for LGBT people, then one is saying that people who don’t see things as “equal” should be able to persecute us. It is high time that more people realized that the only morally relevant question in this debate is how do we ensure that the LGBT community is treated fairly. The idea that people who disagree with us ought to be allowed to persecute us is a recipe for disaster. Let me give you a couple of examples. The most obvious example is the civil rights movement. It was a movement in which people who didn’t agree with it could not be legally forced to treat black people in a certain way. That was unacceptable and immoral. But the second example isn’t as obvious. Say, hypothetically, that a handful of militant atheists start a group called Secular Coalition for America. They gather groups all across the
