Time management is an important thing nowadays, especially with all the activities you want and need to perform, and the little time to do so. What's more, your brain isn't always trustworthy with such tasks, in which case your only option is to rely on specialized applications like Einstime to create a schedule of events. Visually appealing and easy to use. Most of the main window space is a calendar which helps you easily get an overview on time, for better representation of what and when needs to be done.

However, it's possible to switch to a daily view, or even the entire year. The application stores all of its tools in different windows, letting you organize your workspace as you see fit. The corresponding menu also provides quick access in case they're lost somewhere in the background. Set tasks, take notes, and analyze time zones To be fair, you do get to work with a decent variety of tools, in an application's attempt to help you include any detail that can help you out. For instance, you can plan your events according to time zones around the world, with the Almanac feature showing light zones on the world map, according to the time zone you select. By default, a side panel is created out of several tools containing some of the default tools, such as a text editor so you can quickly take notes, a scheduler to view daily timeline and know when tasks are about to start, or even all tasks available for today, with the possibility to create more of them on the spot. Adding new items to your schedule doesn't take much effort. What's more, time options let you configure recurrence, length, and alarms. General options can be managed for all areas, and there are even a few preset list of global events to add to your calendar. A few last words

Taking everything into consideration, we can say that Einstime can help you organize your time a little better. The workspace gives you the possibility to customize the environment by arranging windows, with a variety of related tools to help you have contacts at hand, take notes, and analyze light zones on a map.
